The Treasure House Art Fair 2025 returns to Chelsea this summer for its third and most ambitious edition yet, featuring over 70 leading art and antiquities dealers from around the world. Held in an expanded venue and founded by former Masterpiece organisers Thomas Woodham-Smith and Harry Van der Hoorn, this interdisciplinary fair spans centuries and genres—from ancient artefacts to contemporary design classics. Here are nine standout highlights.

A show-stopping tribute to the legendary Bugatti family—spanning sculpture, furniture, decorative arts and classic cars—The Brilliant Bugattis exhibition is the first of its kind in the UK since 1979. Curated by Bugatti expert Edward Horswell, it features 30 works by Carlo, Rembrandt and Ettore Bugatti, charting their multi-generational legacy in art, design, and engineering.

The Aguas Zarcas meteorite—a rare carbonaceous chondrite that lit up the Costa Rican sky in 2019 before crashing through a doghouse—is the star of the ArtAncient booth. Alongside the meteorite, the damaged doghouse itself is on display, offering a cosmic twist to the fair’s blend of art, science, and storytelling.

Disrupt-Connect: The Sculpture Walk

Curated by Dr. Melissa L. Gustin of National Museums Liverpool, the Sculpture Walk spans three centuries and features 27 works—from a whimsical 1709 wardrobe sculpture named Mr. Joy's Surprise, to contemporary sculptures such as Jill Berelowitz's monumental bronze Majesty artichokes and Massimiliano Pelletti's classically inspired sculptures with a contemporary twist—and leads visitors through the fair and out into the historic gardens of the Royal Hospital Chelsea. Berelowitz's Majesty duo of sculptures can be found at the Fair's entrance and are inspired by the Cardoon Artichoke. The pair are part of a series of works which will lead to the creation of an immortal garden, suitable for any landscape, pulling inspiration from plants and trees which aid humanity either by granting us shade. More sculpture by Pelletti is on display at Bowman Sculpture.

Dr. Melissa L. Gustin told me at the preview of the fair: "The earliest sculpture on the walk is Mr. Joy's Surprise, which is a children's wardrobe from 1709. A lot of people are questioning why it's in a sculpture walk when it's a utilitarian artwork. The reason is that if an object is beautiful and it's in a human home, and made by humans, why is it not sculpture. We've taken that attitude all the way through, putting Antique sculptures next to contemporary artists, with the idea that they connect to humans through many centuries. The antique artworks are here because they still connect to humans, and the contemporary artworks are here because we hope they will connect to future generations.

Mr. Joy's Surprise is signed Edmund Joy 1709 on the back, and the only other one that's been found is in the V&A collection. They are both based on Kew Palace, which took its inspiration from Dutch Architecture.

Dr Gustin includes in her personal highlights Mr Joy's Surprise and also explains:
 "Another highlight is Massimiliano Pelletti's sculpture, which is placed right at the entrance to the fair. Pelletti has reimagined the Gladiatore Borghese from ancient times to today. Pelletti's Grandfather restored Michelangelo's David, and he is making work in the same studio. So it represents those connections through time."

Henrik Godsk's Folkloric Modernism

Danish artist Henrik Godsk fuses early 20th-century Cubism with carnival aesthetics in his bold, stylised portraits. Influenced by his heritage as a seventh-generation fairground traveller, Godsk's works—on display at Vigo gallery—are rich in geometric precision, cultural memory, and a playful tension between handcraft and modernist form. Geometric lines and flattened fields of colour are infused with influences of Modigliani and Russian avant-garde art, combined with decorative patterns inspired by Godsk's upbringing in the fairground community.

Representing Bahrain with a solo booth at De Musson, Rashid al Khalifa presents abstract, mirrored paintings with a modernist edge. Known for blending tradition with futuristic geometry, al Khalifa's work adds a distinctive voice to the fair's contemporary offerings.

De Musson founder Clementine Perrins told me at the fair: "I met Rashid 13 years ago and have created bespoke exhibitions for him in the UK, we have worked with Treasure House to showcase his work to a wider audience."

These handwoven pieces celebrate the enduring legacy of Aubusson weaving through the lens of 20th-century art movements.

Whether you're drawn to cosmic relics, royal curiosities, or cutting-edge contemporary art, the Treasure House Art Fair 2025 offers a compelling cross-section of global creativity and timeless craftsmanship—all under one elegant Chelsea roof.
